How To Protect Your Car Against Catalytic Converter Theft

What makes a car attractive to thieves? It's often this exhaust system part that can be removed in minutes and sold for fast cash.

Think of a catalytic converter as a very special kind of filter for your car's exhaust system that reduces harmful emissions. It's bolted to the underside of every gas-powered car, and it's vulnerable to thieves because it contains metals more precious than gold. The metals convert harmful exhaust into oxygen, nitrogen, and other less harmful gasses. Catalytic converter thefts have been rising, and the devices are expensive to replace. But a few simple steps might help you protect your car.

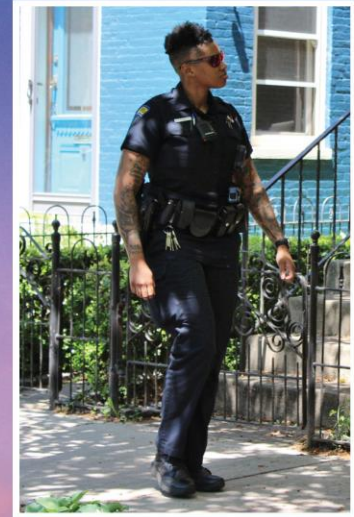

A few key facts about catalytic converter theft and how you can help protect your car:

- Thieves target catalytic converters because they contain precious metals.
- Catalytic converters are vulnerable because they're quick and easy to steal.
- Catalytic converters are expensive to replace.
- You can help protect your car against catalytic converter theft by etching the license plate number on it, parking in well-lit areas and installing an anti-theft device.
