

Lamonte Hall, Jr., named Human Relations Council executive director

Release date: Thursday, Dec. 28, 2023

Mayor Jeffrey J. Mims, Jr., and the Dayton City Commission announce the appointment of Lamonte Hall, Jr., as executive director of the Dayton Human Relations Council, effective January 2, 2024.

In his new role, Hall will assume responsibility for overseeing the various programs and staff of the Human Relations Council, an office that operates with an annual budget of approximately $1.1 million.

“Lamonte’s leadership experience and commitment to Dayton make him ideal to be the next leader of the Human Relations Council,” said Mayor Mims. “There is much work to be done to continue improving equity, inclusion, and access to opportunity in our community. I am confident Lamonte has what it takes to meet these goals and elevate this vital work.”

Hall is a 13-year City of Dayton employee, working in various supervisory and management roles throughout the organization. Prior to this appointment, Hall worked as the assistant to the city manager. In that role, Hall was responsible for spearheading a host of projects. Most notable is his work as project manager for the Dayton Recovery Plan’s $7 million allocation for Black and Brown businesses. Other projects include the West Branch Express and the City’s internal efforts to develop a strategic plan for diversity, equity, and inclusion.

Hall has an MBA from Western Governors University.

Established in 1962 by the Dayton City Commission, the Dayton Human Relations Council enforces civil rights; provides business and technical assistance to minority-owned, woman-owned and small disadvantaged businesses; administers community relations initiatives that promote and maintain peace, goodwill and harmony; assists in reducing inter-group tensions, and ensures equality of treatment and opportunity to all who live, work, play, and gather in the City of Dayton.
