The annual City of Dayton Neighborhood Conference, this year themed “Block by Block,” will take place Saturday, Sept. 28, from 8 a.m. to 1:30 p.m., at Belmont High School (2615 Wayne Ave.).

The program includes keynote speaker Monnie Bush, founder and chief executive officer of the Victory Project. Three consecutive breakout sessions will be offered with presentations by community members, local organizations, and City staff. Sessions will provide learning and networking opportunities with experts and community leaders.

Participants may also visit a resource fair, engage in a collaborative art project, and interact with various City departments. Breakfast and lunch are included.

The conference is open and free to anyone wanting to learn more about making their community a better place for all. Advance registration guarantees a conference t-shirt and tote bag.

The conference is hosted by the City of Dayton Department of Planning, Neighborhoods & Development. For more information and registration, go to www.daytonohio.gov/neighborhoodconference.
