Mayor Nan Whaley will join officials of AMR (American Medical Response, the nation's leading provider of medical transportation) to kick-off the local Earn While You Learn initiative, which allows trainees to work full-time while completing education needed to become certified emergency technicians (EMT).

AMR is seeking 20 candidates for its first Dayton class, slated to begin January 24, 2020.

"We are excited to partner with Mayor Whaley and the City of Dayton to offer residents the opportunity to serve their community without worrying about taking time off without pay," said John Robben, AMR Regional Director of Ohio, Indiana, and Michigan. "We look forward to providing a way to make EMS careers more accessible."

Since launching the program in Buffalo last May, AMR has graduated over 100 EMS professionals.

"It takes a special person to be a first responder," said Mayor Whaley. "This partnership will help Dayton to recruit more high-quality candidates to become EMTs. "

AMR is seeking 20 candidates for its first EMS class, which is slated to begin on January 27, 2020. Interested applicants should visit the AMR website at www.amr.net and select the Dayton, Ohio Careers Section. They may also text EMSJOBS to 97211.
