The U.S. Army training in the city of Dayton is now complete.

“We sincerely appreciate the cooperation we received from Dayton citizens, business owners, and city officials. We could not conduct this important training without their support,” said Army spokesperson, Col. T.J. Rainsford.

This training was coordinated with city, state, and federal officials and planned over the course of more than a year. Training in urban environments like Dayton gives soldiers unique training opportunities that cannot be simulated on a military installation. By honing these skills, soldiers are better prepared for circumstances they may face overseas.

“We were honored to host members of the U.S. Army”, Chief Richard Biehl said, “and to support the enhancement of their ability to complete their critical mission across the globe in defense of our country and our freedom. We are also grateful they took time to share best practices with some of our specialized units to enhance our ability to improve local public safety.”
